

OUR ANNUAL REPORT TO YOU

MARCH, 1973

Our 1972 Annual Report is being mailed to our more than 22,000 shareholders and to you. As you read through it, you will realize that the year 1972 will be remembered as one of solid achievement by you and your company. For example:

- * Operating revenue rose 14% to $240 million and net income climbed to $45 million, a 16% increase over 1971.
- * Common stock earnings increased 13 cents per share, a 9% increase.
- * The quarterly dividend rate was 26 cents a share on common stock, or $1.04 on an annual basis.
- * An 8½% increase in the electric rates of our customers in Texas became effective June 1. This was our first increase in 20 years. Shortly before going to press, we learned that the increase in Louisiana will be in effect shortly.
- * Peak load demand increased to 3,602,700 kilowatts, a 10% upsurge.
- * A July labor agreement was signed and will continue until July 5, 1975.
- * The Company will provide electric service for a new satellite city north of Houston, with a projected population of 150,000 in 20 years.
- * Sixty-year franchises were secured in 46 Louisiana cities and towns. In Texas, five newly incorporated communities granted 50 - year franchises.
- * A total of 350,000 shares of $7.56 Dividend Preferred Stock were sold at competitive bidding, with your Company receiving $100.16 a share. The proceeds were used to pay off short-term borrowings.

While many challenges remain to be solved, these achievements reflect credit on your hard work and perserverence. With this kind of dedicated effort, 1973 should prove to be a year of even greater achievement.

The Annual Report —

A Corporate Mirror

In addition to his many duties as corporate secretary and director of financial administration in Corporate and Finance, Robert W. Jackson is involved in a yearly project that often lasts for six months from start to finish. The project: The Annual Report. A seasoned veteran, Mr. Jackson has been directly involved with the coordination of the Annual Report for the last 18 years, the same length of time he has been with the company.

PLAIN TALKS interviewed Mr. Jackson, and found that the Annual Report, from rough draft to finished copy, is a long and tedious task.

Q. Mr. Jackson, how are you and your department involved in the compilation of the Annual Report?

A. Primarily, our job is part of our investor relations program. We gather from the various departments throughout the company the information that will go into the report, and also act as the coordinator for these departments. Our job is not complete until the finished product returns from the printer and is delivered to the many Annual Report recipients.

Q. Can you give a definition that would describe the Annual Report?

A. The Annual Report is a factual report of what transpired in our Company during the year. It is an accounting of the management's stewardship of the assets entrusted to them. It is not primarily a brochure to sell our product, but rather an attempt to enlighten our shareholders, the investment public and people we do business with about our Company. The financial statements in the report are used by our creditors as a guideline for evaluating our bank lines and commercial paper, as well as by equipment suppliers.

Q. Are there certain guidelines that must be followed in the format of the report?

A. Yes, there are. Since our stock is listed on the New York Stock Exchange, it is a requirement that we publish an annual statement to our stockholders. The report is due by March 31 of each year, and this a rule we agreed to comply with when we listed our stock on the N.Y.S.E. in 1947. Certain financial statements must be included in the report. The amount of the detail of these statements is somewhat up to the Company's management, with no outside regulatory agency having control over what is said. Each department of the Company is responsible for what it believes should be conveyed in the report, as far as its area of work is concerned.

Robert W. Jackson, corporate secretary and director of financial administration-Corporate and Finance, has been involved with the Annual Report for eighteen years.

Q. Who receives the Annual Report?

A. Our report is sent to each of the Company's shareholders (approx. 23,000) and a copy is mailed to each employee, regardless of whether or not he or she owns stock. Copies are also filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Power Commission and three stock exchanges on which our stock is listed. The Annual Report also goes to the trustees of our indentures, and our transfer agents and registrars.

"Each department in the company is responsible for what it believes should be conveyed in the report, so far as its area of work is concerned."

Q. What procedure is followed in producing the Annual Report?

A. In August, our department gets together with the Public Relations Department, and together we decide on a rough format and tentative time schedule. Report content and individual responsibilities are also decided upon at this time. Then, in October, we decide on a cover picture and highlights to be included. At this point, the designated Public Relations representative interviews the various vice presidents, then begins his rough drafts. These drafts are sent to the department heads for changes or rewrites, according to what needs to be emphasized or deleted. At this point, the departmental drafts have some overlapping information, and the department heads are responsible for taking these individual, disjointed stories and tailoring them to their specific topics. Then the drafts are rewritten for continuity, and the Company's officers inspect the material, line by line, adding and deleting from their points of view. The report is then given to President Smith, who adds his perspective to what has been written. The drafts are then submitted to the board of directors, since the Annual Report is actually a statement on their behalf to the shareholders. After the board's approval, the report then goes to the printer for typesetting. The printer is selected by competitive bid, based on what he will charge and the quality of work he is capable of achieving.

Q. How much emphasis is placed on using color in the report?

A. To a large extent, cost determines how much color is used. A readership survey indicated that half of the readers liked color, with the other half in favor of black and white. For this reason, we use four-color process for the report's cover and two-color process for the content. We feel that the use of color enhances the report, as well as improving readership. When you are involved in as much preparation and planning on the report as we are, you want as many people as possible to read what we have to say. The secret is getting someone to open the cover, and color and an appealing cover help achieve this. Making the text clear, neat and understandable also greatly improves readership. There is a jargon peculiar to our industry, and we try to eliminate jargon as much as possible and simplify terms that might leave the reader wondering what he read.

"There is a jargon peculiar to our industry, and we try to eliminate jargon as much as possible and simplify terms that might leave the reader confused."

Q. What happens to the type after it has been set by the printer?

A. Type from the printer is proofread by our department and Public Relations, and changes may still be made at this time. Accuracy and completeness of the financial statements and all figures and statistics in the report are the responsibility of the Treasury Department. Our independent auditors also check for statistical accuracy and content. After the final approval from President Smith, a silver print is produced by the printer, proofed again by the Public Relations Department, then returned to the printer and the finished copies come off of the press.

Q. What topics does the Annual Report cover?

A. Our format runs something like this: the Highlights page comes first. This is used to draw reader interest, and summarizes the year's accomplishments. Next is the President's Letter, which summarizes those matters that have the most impact on the Company, since this is all that some people read before closing the report. The letter is written to a wide variety of people, and simplicity is the key factor in its success. Systems Operations follows, showing Company revenues, expenses, changes in depreciation, if any, and any tax or rate changes. The Expansion Program section tells of our recent construction efforts, such as our nuclear power plant announcements and fuel situations. The Marketing portion of the report lets the people know what we are doing to produce revenues in our Company. Financing is another principal section. The section dealing with Personnel describes personnel opportunities and achievements and the employee's safety program. The Financial Statements division lists statistics for persons wanting to spend additional time learning about the Company.

Q. What thoughts do you have concerning the 1972 Annual Report?

A. I believe the 1972 Annual Report will be one of our most interesting, due to the very nature of our business in 1972. It is well-written, attractively layed out and points up the rapid changes in the world that affect the Company. I believe we have had more involvement of more of our executives in developing and phrasing this report than in the past. The report is truly a concerted effort of all departments. The report can be described as a picture, with the various departments using their brushes to add the different colors. But the man with the whitest of white paint is the President, because he is responsible for the finishing touches of the picture. He is the one person in the Company who sees the report from the overall standpoint, not just any one view in particular. He must convey his optimism to the reader, and for this reason, his finishing touches must achieve perfection.

Equitable Bag New Customer To Company

Effective January 2, Equitable Bag Company of Orange, Tex., the world's largest manufacturer of specialty paper bags, officially began purchasing power from our Company.

In the past, Equitable Bag relied on their own generators for electrical power, but studies by GSU and an independent firm showed that purchasing power would prove to be the most reliable and economical source of energy.

In December 1935, the present company was known as Yellow Pine Pulp and Paper Co., with E. I. Hardy acting as manager. There have been several name changes throughout the years, with the present name of Equitable Bag Co. reflecting company ownership. Mr. Hardy now acts as consultant, with Harold Mills presiding as manager. The company also produces the paper for their specialty bags, and their customers include all large retailers throughout the United States.

Thanks For The Fine Effort

The company recently ended its three-month heating conversion campaign, a program that turned out to be one of the highlights of 1972. The system goal for the campaign was 400 conversions, but the final tally netted 438 conversions, a record for the company.

The campaign's success was a product of hard work by many people, and the magic "400" figure could not have been exceeded without the efforts of the residential sales representatives. PLAIN TALKS would like to recognize the top representative in each division, and congratulate them for their individual contribution.

Jim "Cowboy" Fernandez was the top representative in the Port Arthur Division, finishing the campaign with 9 conversions. A residential sales representative for 17 years, Jim's experience and enthusiasm set the pace in his division. He received a large turkey as an award, which proved to be quite tasty when eaten on New Year's Day. Jim was commended for his fine job by Tom Clark, Port Arthur Residential Sales Supervisor, who commented that he admired Jim's enthusiasm and sales accomplishments during the campaign. As to the secret of his success, Jim said that "the campaign was most enjoyable because of the many benefits and advantages that were offered in converting a customer's home to electric heating. It made my job much easier."

Gene Pairett achieved the honor of top conversion representative in the Beaumont Division. Gene compiled an enviable record of 27 conversions, and led his division in sales throughout the three-month period. His prize for being numero uno was two tickets to the Astrodome, where he and his son enjoyed watching the Oilers and Bengals play football. "Dealer participation helped the campaign a great deal," Gene said, "and the imagination demonstrated by the bird commercials also helped sales a great deal." Gene's imagination was also an important factor in his bid for top honors, as he held noon meetings for employees, showing the bird commercials and a humorous film, then explaining the benefits of converting to electric heating.

Eddie Belair of Jennings and Bill Harrington shared the spotlight as top sales representatives in the Lake

Charles Division. Eddie headed the Jennings team to a whopping 175% of its quota. On the other hand, Bill had the greatest single effort, reporting 39 conversions for the campaign in Lake Charles.

Johnny Yarbrough, flying high with a total of 10 conversions, soared above fellow representatives to finish in first place in the Baton Rouge Division. Arden Loughmiller, Baton Rouge superintendent of sales, presented Johnny with the turkey of his choice at an informal sales meeting held on North Boulevard. Walt Wright, residential sales supervisor, officiated. Johnny also received a dinner for two at a local restaurant for winning the big bird race.

In the Western Division, there was also a tie for first place. Sharing the honors with seven sales each to their credit were Charles Boring and Bill Burke. Charles works in the Navasota office and Bill works in the New Caney office.

Congratulations to these men, as well as everyone else who contributed to the overwhelming success of the campaign.

If the floor appears to be tilting in this picture, you may be right. Big Wayne Moore, 6-6, 270 pound offensive tackle of the Miami Dolphins, was in the main office recently for a visit. Actually it was his wife Verline who came to visit; Wayne just tagged along. Verline is a former employee of the company and brought along Big Wayne and Little Wayne (17-months old), knowing her friends would enjoy meeting them. Little Wayne was the center of attraction and Charlotte Anderson, Sandra Angelle, Darlene Roberson and Dru Plunkett couldn't resist getting in the picture. Wayne played a decisive part in Miami's glittering 17-0 record including a Super Bowl victory over the Washington Redskins. Wayne, the largest player on the Dolphin team, sports a Super Bowl ring from last year with one diamond in the center, but very soon will replace that with a two-diamond ring. "That's the ring we really wanted," smiled Wayne. (from Pat McMeel)

During the last months of 1972, the Western Division held a street lighting campaign between districts, with the winning office receiving a very nice AM-FM radio/cassette player. The final tally showed Conroe the winner over Huntsville by one lite. However, a close check of the records showed Huntsville the winner over Conroe by four lites. Much confusion resulted, and as it now stands, there is still no definite winner. A Senate investigation could probably determine a winner, but regardless of the final results, the point is that the competition was friendly, and both offices turned in fine sales efforts.
